

Life-threatening Illness

Physical illness that is life-threatening is a catastrophic impact on all the dimensions of life. How do we manage such news? Does our experience as psychiatrists offer some insight or prepare us for such a circumstance?

>The writer of this contribution both teaches residents and maintains a private practice. Planning to retire, her life radically changes when he learns she has a glioblastoma.